Curvature of the Spine.

DR. HAMILTON,
No. 47, North Gay street, Baltimore,
HAVING turned much of his attention during a long practice to the diseases of the Spine, begs leave to tender his services for the cure or relief of that afflicting malady. The approach of this disease is easily detected by an attentive observer. It makes its appearance generally in children between the second and sixth year; a protuberance of one or more of the small bones composing the spine becomes evident, loss of appetite, irregularity of the bowels, and emaciation soon follow, together with much disinclination to walk—and unless immediate aid is obtained, death or incurable decripitude through life are the certain consequences.

Doctor Hamilton has the satisfaction of knowing that his treatment of this disease, and application of the necessary apparatus, which is simplified at the same time, that it is materially improved, have received the unqualified approbation of many of the most eminent of his medical brethren in Baltimore. Spring corsets, upon a new principle, can be applied for the use of young ladies evincing a tendency to this disease, which, while they afford the most effectual support for either side, may be worn without observation. Satisfactory references might be given to parents whose children have profited by this improved mode of treatment, did not delicacy forbid the publication: they may be easily obtained if desired, by a private interview.

Notice,

To Wheelwrights, Blacksmiths, Tanners, Harness-Makers, Saddlers, Hatters, &c.

BELIEVING as I do, that PROVIDENCE, at Fairfax Court-House, would be a suitable situation for mechanics of the above description, I offer to such, lots in that village for sale, on ground rent for ever—will build and furnish suitable houses and rent to them, or furnish brick to them to build with; and invite any who feel disposed to settle there, for the purpose of carrying on their respective trades to advantage, to come and view the situation. It is a very public place, the centre of the county, where the superior and county courts are held. The Little River Turnpike Road passes through this little town from Alexandria westward, and where all the public meetings for the county, &c. are held; and where trades of the aforesaid description being carried on, would meet with great encouragement, and be a public convenience to the country around. No situation can be more healthy—good water, and fire wood cheap. Mechanics of the above description must generally depend on the country people, farmers, &c. to be their customers. Here they would be in a convenient situation for all the purposes. I invite a call, and view for themselves. I would also furnish lots adjacent, from one to five acres each, for cultivation, pasture, &c. on moderate terms; all of which can be shown, and terms made known, on application to RICH'D. RATCLIFFE,
Fairfax Court-House, Va.

OF FRANCE.

Extract of a letter from an American gentleman in Paris, to his friend in Baltimore, dated March 14th.

"Several important transactions which have lately taken place in the internal politics of France, are very interesting, from the decisive influence they will probably have on the future destiny of the country, and even of Europe. The most decisive of these is the trial of streugth, which occurred about two weeks ago, between the two great parties, the Ultras and the Liberals, relating to the law of elections, and which ended in the entire discomfiture of the Ultras. In three months the Liberals have gained several advantages; their first great triumph was the change of ministry, which took place in the beginniog of January. The cabinet had been, since the last return of the Bourbons, under the guidance of the Duke of Richelieu, an emigre, and an ultra in his opinions, and to whom, in a great measure, the death of Ney is attributed by his partizans. He appeared, by his conduct, to be completely directed by the leading strings of the allied sovereigns. Towards the end of the last year he experienced considerable annoyance from the opposition of the minister of police (one of the cabinet) Count Descazes, a Liberal, who dared more from being personally a favorite of the king. Richelieu determined to get rid of this inconvenient assistant, and offered his resignation to the King, in the alternative of his not being permitted to form a ministry to his own mind; all his colleagues now refused to serve, unless the cabinet was entirely of their own party, instead of a mixed one, as before. The king remained undecided and vaciliating for more than a week, during which time the Thuilleries was a continued scene of intrigue and confusion, and the whole city in a ferment — The ferment was so considerable, and the cause of the liberals so generally the cause of the country, that it overcame—and the duke, who had confided in his own strength was entirely defeated, and was left out of the new ministry, which was formed with Descazes at its head, and under his direction. The satisfaction of the country generally, and the disappointment and anger of the smaller party, were very strong and warmly expressed.

This defeat drove the Ultras to think of other manœuvres—they and the royalists, who generally side with them, when joined, have the majority in the house of delegates, and they had the complete mastery of the house of Peers. The present law of election for delegates makes the qualification for a voter his paying 300 frs. taxes or contributions directes. Under it, many men of staunch republican or constitutional principles have been elected, notwithstanding all the efforts the government made to prevent it. The most conspicuous of them is La Fayette—the next election promised to add very considerably to their numbers. The hopes of the Ultras were then turned to the possibility of altering the law, so as to put the election in their own power by making the qualifications much more considerable. Such an alteration was violently opposed thro'out the whole country, and, I have little hesitation in saying, would, if effected, have rendered open war, not only probable, but almost certain. In consequence of ther violent wishes, about two weeks ago, the Marquis de Barthelemy, to effect their purpose, proposed in the House of Peers a motion to revise the law of elections, a motion whose object seemed to show that the Marquis had thrown off and forgotten the Abbe and the author of Anacharsis—such a change do times make in men. After several days of hubbub and alarm, during which the motion was under discussion —the minority, determined on a firm opposition to them, resolved on a bold step, and by the creation of a batch of a number of new peers, secured the majority in their own hands, and put the matter at rest.— The king, poor old man, was probably alarmed by the cloudy accounts which he heard from every quarter, and which he certainly had good reason to be alarmed at.

"The Ultras complain bitterly that the king has, to use their expression, thrown himself into the arms of the Bonapartists, as they call the Liberals. Their hopes are now fixed in his dying soon, which his infirm health seems to render probable; but in fact, it is likely that, accident apart, he will survive several years. He has not been outside the chateau for more than two months. In case of this occurrence, the Comple d'Artois, who is at their head, would certainly gratify, to the utmost extent, their wish for violent and energetic measures. He is excessively attached to every thing of the ancient regime. Should his hand be decked with the sceptre before things have had time to fix themselves on a firmer basis than they are at present, results must occur, which may be easily and almost certainly foreseen.

"At this time there is a buzz of a conspiracy against the ministry, at the bottom of which is Talleyrand. The old fish, deprived of power, seems at present to be out of his element. There is always fear for the beer when he has a hand in the brewing. By the bye, I was surprised at his frankness, in observing on his hotel, immediately over the grand entrance, and, by way, I suppose, of coat of arms, a very pretty weathercock. Or perhaps he put it there jnst to amuse himself occasionally, by observing which way the wind blows.

"A discussion is shortly expected in the Chamber of Deputies on the liberty of the press, which, though it enjoys considerable freedom, and expresses sentiments with little disguise, is still subject to the censorship, which must authorize every article before it is printed. During the Emperor's reign of 100 days, it was entirely free, and was almost as liberal in his abuse as in his praise."

From the Baltimore Morning Chronicle.

DECLINE OF COMMERCE.

The decline of commerce has been a subject of general complaint, and has been imputed to a variety of unsatisfactory causes. The situation of the world for twenty-five years past, will we think sufficiently account for this phenomenon. During this period, Europe has been engaged in a sanguinary and exterminating war: our whole continent has been a theatre of destruction. It matters not, so far as the present question is concerned, which of the parties are the victors or vanquished; both victors and vanquished must be fed; subsistence and cloathing must be obtained from a nation who is not a party in the contest. What is the wonder then if the commerce of a neutral power during such a season of storm and peril, thrives with unprecedented activity! what the wonder it extravagant prices for all the articles of subsistence and cloathing are demanded and received!— When one nation has been persecuted with fire and sword to the waters edge, and deprived of all supplies by land, what is the wonder if she pays exorbitantly for those supplies which the wind and the waves conspire to waft upon her shores? When peace once more weilds her sceptre of olive an entire change of scene takes place.— Every independent power instead of relying on precarious commerce for articles of food and cloathing, depends on the cultivation of its own resources. But the question may previously be put, is this a thing to be lamented? During seasons of such storm and tempest, let it be remembered that the spirit of rash adventure, so excited, cannot properly be called a commercial spirit; it is a spirit totally irreconcileable to that slow cautious, progressive calculation by which mercantile fortunes are usually made when the world enjoys repose. If the vessel arrives in safety at the destined port, when the world is in arms, the profits of the voyage are so enormous, that they resemble more the fortunate chances of a lottery, than any other mode of acquiring property

The bait is too tempting, too facinating to be resisted; and though ninety-nine who embark in such speculation fall the victims, yet if the hundreth is successful the genius of enterprise fixes her keen and lynx-like eye, not on the glittering wrecks by which she is surrounded, but on the dazzling prosperity of the one successful candidate. This may be called rather an ocean lottery than commerce; it leads to a rash gambling. Those who have been engaged in such splendid adventures, look with loathing on the slow acquisitions of steady and systematic commerce.

How often have we heard our fellow citizens wish that the demon of destruction might be let lose on the European world again,—that rapine, and ruin, and desolation, and slaughter might stalk over the soil so recently polluted with human blood; that mangled limbs and mutilated carcasses might strew the field of battle; that more widows and orphans might shed unavailing tears; and that empires might be converted into sepulchres, for no other reason than to pick a profitable speculation from such a complicated mass of human misery.

But while we are imploring heaven to create so much misery for our benefit; while we think that the tears of the orphan and of the widow may be fairly exchanged for a guinea in our pockets; let us remember, that in the future economy of Divine Providence, the case may be reversed; that we may be the suffering nation, and that Europe may be destined to speculate upon our sorrows. While we wish misery on the other side of the Atlantic, we may justly tremble lest Divine Providence should inflict it on this. Heaven has always been kinder to us than we have been to ourselves.

From the New-York Daily Advertiser.

We are surprised that none of the booksellers in this country have re-published a book which has appeared within the last twelve months, entitled—"Iceland; or the Journal of a Residence in that Island, during the years 1814 and 1815, containing Observations on the Natural Phenomena, History, Literature, and Antiquities of the Island; and the Religion, Character, Manners, and Customs of its Inhabitants.—By Ebenezer Henderson." The author of this work has been well known for a considerable time past, as one of the agents of the "British and Foreign Bible Society," employed by them to explore different and distant regions, for the purpose of enabling them to discover and relieve their necessities with regard to the great object of the Institution—the HOLY SCRIPTURES.— In this service, and for these purposes, he visited this remote and dreary spot, and there passed a considerable period, during which he collected the materials of which his work is composed. Parts of this work we have seen published in the Reports of the Society under whose directions he travelled; and we can say with the utmost sincerity, that we have rarely met with any thing in any similar production more highly entertaining. The entire publication we have not seen; but in the Quarterly Review for December, 1818, there is an extensive and interesting article upon it, which conveys a very favorable opinion of its merits.

"Iceland," say the Reviewers, "situated on the confines of the habitable part of our globe, completely refutes the notion, at one time so boldly asserted, that a mild climate and a clear atmosphere were essential to the full developement of the human faculties; for we find that here, without any of the soft and genial air, and the bright and azure skies of Italy, the human intellect always has been, and continues to be, cultivated with zeal and success—that even here, the Muses have not disdained to pay their frequent visits, nor have their votaries courted them in vain. It was on this desolate and dreary spot, amid the conterminous regions of frost and fire, under dense clouds and chilling mists, that the Scalds sang their tales of other times, as we find them collected in the Edda—that the historians composed their Sagas, and the legislators a code of laws, the spirit and principle of which continue to the present day. In other nations, the cultivation of letters has usually followed wealth and luxury—in Iceland, they flourished in the midst of poverty and distress. The time too, when these exertions were made is not the least singular part of the history—at a period when the darkest ignorance was spread over the European world. Whether, therefore, we are disposed to examine the natural phenomena which this Island exhibits, or the singular character of the people by whom it is inhabited—whether we direct our attention to the physical or moral circumstances existing on this spot of land, heaved up, to all appearance, by the operation of fire from the debth of the frozen ocean, we may venture to assert that Iceland will be found to stand alone, and without a parallel."

As evidence that genius has a residence, at the present time, in this forlorn region, the following extract may be adduced.— "Dr. Henderson paid a visit, on his way from this place, (Eyafiord) to Bægisa, the residence of Jon Thorlakson, the celebrated poet of Iceland and translator of Milton; he was making hay, but on hearing of the approach of strangers, he hastened home, and bidding them welcome, ushered them into his humble apartment."

"The door is not quite four feet in height and the room may be about eight feet in length by six in bredth. At the inner end is the poet's bed, and close to the door, over against a small window not exceeding two feet square, is a table where he commits to paper the effusions of his muse. On my telling him that my countrymen would not have forgiven me, nor could I have forgiven myself, had I passed through this part of the Island without paying him a visit, he replied, that the translation of Milton had yielded him many a pleasant hour, and often given him occasion to think of England; but as his residence was so far north, and he had now lived so long without seeing any of Milton's countrymen, he had not entertained the most distant idea that ever he was to be favored with such a gratification."

"Dr. Henderson speaks in high terms of this translation; in many instances, he says, it almost seems to surpass the original itself; and he considers the poet's inability to give it to the press, as a real loss to Scandinavian literature."

On a visit to the northern extremity of the Island, Dr. Henderson visited the extraordinary cavern of Surtshellir, formed by a crust of lava, measuring about 40 feet in height by 40 in breadth, and extending to the length of 4304 feet. The following description of part of this wonderful place, will serve as a specimen of the work—

"We now entered the aperture at the opposite end, and almost instantaneously found ourselves enveloped in thicker darkness than ever, but met with neither water nor stones. The floor was covered with a thick coating of ice, and dipped so rapidly, that finding it impossible to keep our feet, we sat down, and slid forward by our own weight. On holding the torches close to the ice, we could discover its thickness to be seven or eight feet, clear as crystal. It was not long till we reached a spot, the grandeur of which amply rewarded our toil; and would have done so, though we had travelled an hundred times the distance to see it. The roof and sides of the cave were decorated with the most superb icicles, crystallized in every possible form, many of which rivalled in minuteness the finest zeolites; while from the icy floor, rose pillars of the same substance, assuming all the various and fantastic shapes imaginable, mocking the proudest specimens of art, and counterfeiting many well known objects of animated nature. Many of them were upwards of four feet high, generally sharpened at the extremity, and about two feet in thickness. A more brilliant scene perhaps never presented itself to the human eye, nor was it easy for us to divest ourselves of the idea that we actually beheld one of the fairy scenes depicted in eastern fable. The light of the torches rendered it peculiarly exchanting."

ALEXANDRIA:
WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 1819.

ON THE EARLY STUDY OF THE SACRED WRITINGS AT SCHOOL.

Few, I believe, will deny their assent to what I urged in my former letter, (see Thursday's Gazette)—and never was the advice of Horace more applicable to any book than to the bible:

Nocturna versate mana versate diurna,
Ponder on it by day and muse on it by night.

These remarks were offered through a wish to recommend to the young and studious, a necessary and ready method of amusement, from which they must derive the most advantageous instructions, and the most important of all knowledge; for we cannot peruse it without being pleased; and who that is pleased will be inclined to disbelieve or doubt the purposes for which the different portions of scripture were composed and collected? We must consider ourselves obliged to defend the innocence of her authors, and feel ourselves flattered to favor the beauty and sublimity of their style and language. A proper comparison of their graces with those of other writers, constantly read and universally admired, would improve the taste and encrease a desire of searching after those beauties, which at first sight astonish and excel all others we are already acquainted with. Whatever errors may be discovered in an essay on this subject, it is still expected that they will not undo the design for which it is undertaken; it is rather to invite than to command the inclination of the reader to survey the parts which are introduced, and which seem to merit a preference of applause; and the authors of which are entitled to the most honorable decisions of literary judicature. Though this attempt may appear weak, and though the parts selected may appear injudicious to a critical examiner, it is hoped, however, that it will employ the disapprover to confirm the truth of his objections, and dispose him to a closer application of religious reading than he otherwise might have done, which will therefore answer the end aimed at in this effort, as effectually as if he had been pleased with the observations, or had approved of the proceedings.

The style of the prophetic writings has always been esteemed as highly poetical; and it is a matter of amazement that the numerous commentators who have illustrated the thoughts and diction of the poets of different languages, should so sparingly advert to the superior excellence of the Hebrew bards, an excellence that cannot be disputed or reduced to a competition. The subject of every heathen or christian poet of eminence, commences with some remote exploit, where the scene of action is confined, and the space of time limited and contracted, without any connection of the facts related, or the persons introduced by those writers who went before them; for each author seems to have formed a seperate plan, and to have studied the invention of new characters and unaccustomed incidents: but in the several divisions of the sacred composers of the Bible, we perceive an artless relation between every part and every book of it, from the birth of nature to that important crisis, when the holy evidences of our faith were manifested to the world. To doubt their authenticity is a miserable evasion, and an impious presumption. Does any one hesitate to attribute to the pen of Homer the Iliad and Odyssey? Yet more objections might be started of the certainty of such a concession, than could be invented to deny Moses to be the composer of the Pentateuch, all of which, except the book of Genesis, contain the history of his own time: nor is there any thing wonderful in his acquiring an information of the events previous to the age he lived in. Methusalah, who died the year of the flood, was born long before the death of Adam, and had also the opportunity of conversing with Shem, the son of Noah. Shem survived during the life time of Abraham, the chosen father of the faithful, who must have been careful to make the mystery known to his grandson Jacob, nor have we any reason to doubt, from the amiable and religious character of Jacob, that he would instruct his sons in so important a part of belief; how easily then their might it be retained in the family by tradition, although they had not even yet invented any symbols or letters to keep it, until the days of Moses, who was himself the son of Amram, the grand son of Levi.

Besides the prophetic writings, we find frequently through the Bible, not only single passages, but entire chapters in the highest strain of poetry. The very opening of the Book of Genesis is in a style and sublimity superior to that of any other poet. Homer, Virgil, and Milton, begin their works uniformly with an address to their muse, in a sort of argument or prologue to their whole poem;—Tasso and Voltaire have copied them.—With how much more propriety and confidence does the Hebrew bard enter upon his subject? "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, and the earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep, and the spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."——The propagation of Light has been honorably distinguished by Longinus—"And God said, let there be light, and there was light."— The closest imitation of it is by Ovid; but, unable to comprehend the mystery of the creation, he has refined and extended his account with the philosophy of his time, and has attributed the admirable structure of the universe to a being of power superior to any of the heathen deities. "Quis quis fuit ille deorum—whosoever of the gods he was"—because he could not conceive how any of the gods of his own worship was capable of giving existence to this miraculous world. And he afterwards offers but a doubtful opinion of the manner of the creation of mankind.

BARROW.

PLATTSBURGH AND ROUSE'S POINT.

We are happy to have it in our power to contradict a report, published some time since in this paper, stating that Plattsburgh was on the British side of the boundary line, between the United States and Canada. Our intelligent informant states, from unquestionable authority, that the town of Plattsburgh, ever memorable for the naval achievement of commodore McDonough, during the late war with Britain, is at least twenty miles south of the parallel of 45 degrees; and that Rouse's Point, also, where the United States are erecting extensive military works, is thought to be situate only some yards on the south side of the above parallel, but it was not yet positively determined. BANKS.

There is some difficulty in catching the arrangements of the Banks, as they change from day to day.

The office of the U. S. Bank at Washinton, is said to refuse any of the District notes on deposit: but they receive them in payment.

The office in this city refuses the branch notes of our State Banks, even in payment. They refuse the mother notes as a deposit in those cases, where it is obvious from the face of the transaction that the depositor means to draw out the U. States notes to be sent to the north, where they bear some premium over the state paper. The mother bank in Philadelphia finds its branch notes in great circulation; this is probably one of the means by which this circulation is brought about; and this is one of the reasons why the Bank wishes to set its face against the money changers.

The State Banks also in this City refuse their branch notes on deposit.—This policy is said to be dedicated by the consideration that the U. S. Office has received the branch notes, and would present them to the mother banks to be exchanged for specie.

In the Western Country, the course of the banks is not sufficiently intelligible for us to define it. It was said, that an arrangement was on foot between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Cincinnati, to receive its notes in payment of the United States taxes—but one condition of the arrangement was, that the bank should resume its specie payments.—A Kentucky paper subsequently stated that the arrangement had failed; from what cause, was not suggested.

The effort has been more successful in another quarter—A Chilicothe paper of the 16th informs, that the Bank of Steubenville has been selected for the deposit of the public monies of the U. S. in the eastern part of Ohio. The government had furnished this bank with $50,000 as a permanent cash deposit, and is to extend this deposit according to the trouble and expense to which the bank may be subject in receiving and paying the public monies.

GOOD TAVERN REGULATIONS IN OHIO.

By a recent law, passed by the legislature of Ohio, no person is allowed to keep a tavern, unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court granting the licence, that he is provided with a good house con tained at least four rooms, and three fireplaces, and is furnished with four beds—and that he is also provided with a good stable, divided into at least six stalls. All tavern keepers are prohibited from selling on credit to any person liquor of any kind to an amount exceeding fifty cents—and is prohibited from any recovery beyond that amount. Every tavern keeper is also subject to a fine of 20 dollars for permitting any justice of the peace to hold a court in his house; and for permitting any kind of rioting, revelling or drunkenness in or about his house, he forfeits a sum not exceeding 50 dollars, and the suspension of his licence for the space of four months.

Violence.

ON Saturday evening last, about 11 o'clock, I was sitting on the quarter-deck of my vessel, when a man on board a craft not far from me began to mock the watchmen; and they came down, and he made his escape. One of them came on board my vessel, and took me by the shoulder, saying to the others, this is the man. I immediately told them they were mistaken—I was not the person, for he was in the other vessel, showing them—but all in vain;—you are the man, and I will swear it, said one of them. Now I am determined if money can do me justice, and can relieve men from being dragged from their vessels by violence, to that dirty place called the watch-house, to prosecute for the assault, as I do not know what other redress I can get. If men are to be treated in this way, I am sure no decent person will come to the wharfs of Alexandria. After taking me, my hands being in the cabin, they hauled the slider over, and fastened it—so they had to remain there until they could alarm the neighboring vessels to relieve them from the cabin. I appeal to the public, whether a peaceable man should be hauled through the streets by a parcel of men who do not know their business.

Gunston for Sale.

THIS elegant estate is situated on the Potomac, 16 miles below Alexandria —it is bounded on three sides by the Potomac and Pohick creek, and contains nearly 3,000 acres of land, level and fertile, to which are attached six shad and herring fisheries, two of which command the river channel. This land will be laid off in four tracts, so as to have one or more fisheries to each; these tracts will be again divided if requisite. This estate is level and beautifully situated, very fertile, and remarkably healthy. Plaister acts with an effect equal to that of any part of Virginia or Pennsylvania.—I have used 500 bushels in twelve months, and such is its beneficial operation, that were I to keep this land I should considerably increase the quantity. A manufacturing mill is distant about two miles, on a stream navigable for vessels carrying 1200 bushels of wheat, where the Baltimore and Dist. of Columbia prices are given for grain: being bounded on 3 sides by water, a small extent only of fence is necessary to inclose the whole: it would be admirably adapted to grazing. The improvements are a large and very substantial brick mansion, 40 by 70 feet, with every necessary outhouse, three commodious barns, houses for Negroes, and fish houses at each of the fisheries. 120,000 bricks and 1000 bushels of lime are just burnt on the premises. There is a considerable extent of live fence, both useful and ornamental, two orchards of well selected apples and peach, besides an abundance of other choice fruit. More than 150 acres are in clover, 200 in corn, and land is in preparation for sowing 250 bushels of small grain. Any quantity of hay can be cut from the low grounds, some of which (and all might,) have been reclaimed at a trifling expense. The river and creeks, abound with wild fowl, particularly canvass backs, the woods with deer and a variety of other game. Mules, cattle, highly improved sheep, farming utensels and household furniture can be had. The terms of sale will be accommodating. Property in any of the cities, negroes, bank stock, western lands, or lands near the Ridge, will be taken in payment.—Letters must be addressed to me at Pohick Church, Fairfax county, Virginia.

September 4 GEORGE MASON.

Valuable Property for Sale.

THE subscriber is desirious of selling a handsomely situated farm, on Hunting creek, in Fairfax county Virginia, adjoining the Mount Vernon estate and the lands of general Thomson Mason, four miles from Alexandria, containing about 240 acres, 80 of which are in wood—40 to 50 in thriving meadow of clover and timothy—a part of the residue recently seeded with wheat and rye, and clover, last spring—the whole enclosed with a new post and rail fence.—The improvements are, a comfortable and convenient frame dwelling house and kitchen, smoke house, poultry house, granary and stables.—There is on this place a rich and productive garden, and a large body of marsh meadow, from which may be saved annually 100 tons of hay, nearly as nutricious as the best timothy or clover.—With the farm would be sold a number of very valuable horses, cows and sheep; waggon, carts, and a variety of farming utensils and household and kitchen furniture; corn, oats and rye, and 40 tons hay. Also, adjoining the one above described, a farm containing 160 acres, recently enclosed, on which is a brick house, which a trifling expense would render comfortable. The soil is excellent, and a considerable part might be easily converted into meadow.—it would be sold with the other or separately. Also, a number of valuable servants, male and female. To prevent unnecessary application, he would observe, that they will only be sold to persons residing in the District or its vicinity, and not to be carried from it. The subscriber will also sell the greater part of his household furniture, which is new and handsome. For terms of all or any part of the above property, apply to NOBLET HERBERT, esq. or
